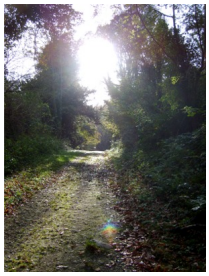
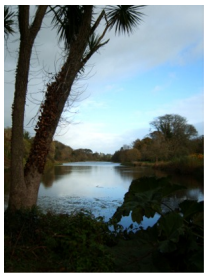
Well I had a nice relaxing day today, which I think was well overdue. I went to Castle Ward, which is a country estate around half an hour from where I live. Best of all there is no entrance fee during the winter months. There were only four cars in the place the whole day. So I had a nice walk around, and sat down and ate lunch. Then I drew a picture of some trees, took a few photographs, then headed to the Bible book shop and bought a few presents for Christmas. All by myself, which is a first for me. I thought you might like to see some of the pictures.





The lough-side walk, and Temple Water lake. Note the wild Rhubarb plant growing in the foreground...

Some nice looking pine trees. I had my lunch here.

Temple summer house... This is the bit where I put my hands on each pillar and...
