I have spent the last week or so upgrading the website. There are still a few tweaks to be made here and there with the layout and content, but hopefully the site itself should perform better than the old one. I have kept the 'blog' view design, having not yet found an easier and more presentable way of displaying the articles. The facebook recommend and share buttons are not displayed on the front page at present, but these can still be accessed when viewing a single article. This is achieved by clicking on an article's title link. Over the next few days I will also be redesigning the newsletter. I would appreciate your suggestions or criticisms as how to improve the site. Thanks again!
